

The FCC should not implement any proposal that would lessen Indiana's Telephone Privacy law protections. Indiana's Telephone Privacy law has improved my time at home because now instead of 10-15 calls per week I have received none since I signed up on the list. Nothing is more aggravating than to set down for dinner and have someone call and try to sell you something, then not want to take "NO" for an answer. I realize people make a living and care for their families doing telemarketing but the companies who do it should take into consideration most people work during the day and don't like to be bothered at home with these calls. If I want to purchase a product or service from a company I will call them, I DO NOT want them calling me and asking if I would be interested in windows, siding, waterproofing my basement, sealing my roof, free home analysis, CD of the Month club, need I go on???
